session."

CHANGING SENTIMENT.

The truth is that at least ten of the Democratic senators were of the opinion that the extra session was unnecessary and inadvisable, and five of these at first refused to sign, but they at last deferred to the judgment of the majority. The members of the House were much more unanimous. They saw their calendar crowded with private and local bills and no way to get rid of them but through an extra session, as of them but through an extra session, as fast as the Senate, and consequently have more business on their calendar. So there now seems little prospect of an extra session. The two-thirds of each house cannot be gotten to sign the application unless the Coallitionists break their resolve and come in and help those Democrats who honestly, sincerely, patriotically think an extra session necessary—necessary as well to put through public as private and local measures.

ADJOERN SATURDAY.

The resolution adopted by the Senate provides for an adjournment sine die on Saturday, 15th. It was thought that by that time all pressing public business and much of the other could be put through. The important pending measures are the tax and appropriation bills, and both are now well under way. Most of the investigations will have to be dropped or hurried through: that is, if there is to be no extra session.

The have the advantage off being both handsome and historically correct. The hirst dress is an exact copy of the famous painting by Rubens, reprepenting his wife, the dress being from a descrip-ion given by Bandello in an old edition of his great work, "Ariosto Furioso." from the plot of which Shakspeare evidently built "Much Ado." This is the dress that attracted so much attention at the great Dramatic Festival at Cincinnati and which was so highly praised by the critics there. It is of black silk velvet with dark trimmings cut ceived at the Book Auction, next to Planters National Bank, 1202 Main street. Imen traine; the sleeves are full, cut in the fif-teenth-century fashion, sinshed from the shoulder prove this opportunity, as the entire valto the elbow with pink satin corded with gold lace. The corsage is low, square-cut, with puffings of rich satin and lace. Around the waist hangs a targe gold cord, suspended from which is a large, handsome fan of pink ostrich plumes. A high Medici collar is worn, lined with pullings of atin and trimmed with alternate rows of large and small pearl beads. On the head is worn a large black velvet bat with a number of pink plumes. In the second act Mademoiselle wears a white satin skirt brocaded with Blacs; the front white sain waves of lines in satin and gold lace. A domino in lilac satin covers the figure; the domino is trimmed with gold and lace, parting sufficiently in front to show the satin skirt and give good effect to the dress. In the hair are worn diamond ornaments. The third dress is of white has prolonged his stay at the St. James Ho-tel. Richmond, giving all those who have had no chance to consult him an opportu-nity to do so. He treats successfully all diamond ornaments. The inited areas is of white satin throughout, broccaded in littles-of-the-valley. The whole front is embroidered with pearls, deep flounces of pearls covering the bottom of the dress. The sleeves are cut in the fifteenth-century style with puffings of satin, a Medica collar, beautifully embroidered, completes the dress. On the breast Mile, RHEA wears a handsome diamond. chronic diseases, and none suffering should fail to call on him and receive the benefit ornament, a sourenir from the members of the Comedie Francaise at Paris.

The Washington Post says: Scribe's absorbing drama, "Adrienne." was presented at Whitney's last night with Mile. RHEA as "Adrienne Leconvreur." It was an impersonation, the most striking qualities in which were regal magnifi-cence of bearing, overwhelming tracic power, ficates published in another column by Dr. Moses of cures performed by him in stammering, cancer, and catarrh.
